Q: How to pass non-json string to python handler I have a URL that looks like this: As a part of this url, I have id=201712180000. I am running a python handler that makes a request with this id and sends the result back. I have verified that my id is in the URL. How can I pass this value into the python handler to be parsed? I can't seem to figure out how to do this since the id is not in a json format and I do not have a request body. A: You can use a python library such as http.client to make the request and deal with parsing the response. However, if you are able to make the request directly in python (eg. using urllib2), you would probably want to parse the response using urllib.parse. Then you would be able to access the id by checking the "subid" key. : Human leukocyte antigen IC₅₀ : Half-maximal inhibitory concentration *K_d : Dissociation constant LPS : Lipopolysaccharide MFI : Mean fluorescence intensity NCI : National Cancer
