Time in progress bar is much faster in Windows Why do I get progress bars with a time value that is higher in Windows than on Linux? (new Thread(new RandomAccessFile("./old.txt", "r")).start())

.join(10L); Without this, the progress bar goes from 0% to 100% in about 7.4 seconds.

But with the above, the progress bar is showing 0% in about 3.5 seconds. Why is this? I am using Java 9 and using the sun.misc.Unsafe class to read the file. A: If the program only processes one file (and terminates afterwards) then the time spent in the read/write I/O operation might be the reason. This can become noticeable when the file contains a lot of data. I.e. when the file is big enough to make it worthwhile to read and write it to disk and only afterwards, do your computation. If you really want to measure the time spent in your computation, then I suggest using `System.nanoTime()` instead of `System.currentTimeMillis()`. This will always return a positive number, except when the JVM is interrupted. For the task you are doing, this won't make much of a difference, but as a general rule, always use it. «Είναι πολύ απλά το να κοιτάς κάθε μήνα κάτι, κάτι από χαμηλά διαστήματα, το να καταλαβαίνεις ότι δεν είναι απλά απλό, είναι πάρα πολύ σημαντικό, αυτό που γίνε

Lattice matroids are a subset of flat matroids defined by the special case of uniform hyperplane arrangements (Hurlbert, 1986). An important application is in electrical engineering where the matroid is the load distribution matroid of a star topology (see Bidigare, 2006). The theory of lattice.
