Full movie main hoon na Q: Adding child objects to my parent class while keeping them separate from each other I am new to python. I am trying to make a kind of simple tree. I have a class that holds data about objects. All of those objects have their own data and can have children. However, when I add a child I have to create a new object (child class). This can get messy and takes a lot of space. How can I make it so that the child class is in a "child object" of my parent class but still can have its own data and its own children. The code is listed below and I am not exactly sure what to do. I am just going around in circles and am trying to figure out what the best way to do this would be. class Parent(object): def __init__(self, name): self.name = name def get_name(self): return self.name def __str__(self): return self.name class Child(Parent): def __init__(self, name, parent): super().__init__(name) self.parent = parent def get_name(self): return self.name def __str__(self): return str(self.name) + " + self.parent.name If I want to add a child to my parent class, it has to be a new instance (Parent.Child(name)). If I want to have more than one child, I have to create a new instance for each child (Parent.Child(name)). Is there a better way to do this? A: You have several options: Use composition: class Parent(object): def __init__(self, name): self.name = name def get_name(self): return self.name def __str__(self):
