A: Sounds like you have a parser library that is consuming too much memory, or you have a manual regex implementation that has memory leaks. Since you didn't post any code, I can only guess at what you are doing, but this looks like a memory leak in your code. Your regular expression looks like it is consuming a lot of memory. Try changing the numbers, range and patterns to just integers. Try changing it to only accept numeric characters. Look into 'greedy' vs 'non-greedy' patterns. Try to only match a single number per line. Try to only match a single pattern per line. If it doesn't fix the memory leak, you will need to post some code that highlights the exact lines that the memory leak is occurring at. Inspired by other projects that only target a few boards, here's the one for everyone. You can choose which company you want to support by picking an board from a boardlist. Do not just start work. When you have it ready, tell me what you have done for your board, and I will add your entry to the list. For all other entries, just say it's ready when you have the parts and everything else is working. Have fun! OK! I worked on my version a bit, but finished it. I used my new pallet shelf as a workbench to glue the parts together, and then painted everything first, then primed. I did a brass plate and oil coating on the parts I didn't want to paint. Also painted some brass screws from 25mm. It's only a few parts, so that's about it. Been quite busy with renovating the last days (and nights), so I haven't been able to do more. If you need any pictures, please ask in my shop. I'll have to wait a bit till I get the pump working again. This is my second project. The first one I made a pump for (tepod), but it was lacking a part to catch the flow. Made a control board from Ralge and tegra2 A13 pieces. Power is supplied from my old eth controller, with rewiring for the 3.3 volt to the tepod. I've lost some flow, but still enough for 3-4mbps. Main reason for making it now is that I want to try to build a styrofoam table with this. 3da54e8ca3
