B.1.1. Graphics and imagery credits Photoshop's graphics and imagery credits are often included in the beginning of the document. However, when adding graphics and imagery to a document, remember to add them to the layers as well. To prevent accidental image deletion, add the graphics and images to the layers they belong to. Note: If you're using Photoshop layers, then you'll want to temporarily turn off the layer when you import graphics and imagery.

Carotid ultrasonography in local staging of non-small-cell lung cancer: results from two randomized trials. To compare the accuracy of preoperative carotid ultrasound (US) with that of computed tomography (CT) in local staging of non-small-cell lung cancer (NSCLC). Two prospective randomized trials compared the accuracy of preoperative carotid US with that of CT for local staging of NSCLC (prospective I, 22; prospective II, 42). The patients in the prospective trials underwent both preoperative carotid US and CT, which was also performed for salvage in the case of tumor recurrence, and postoperative resection. The end points were the presence of metastasis to the carotid nodes and the degree of agreement between US and CT. Tumor extension was identified with either method in 32 patients (prospective I) and 36 patients (prospective II). In the prospective trials, the sensitivity of US was superior to that of CT (50% vs 33% in prospective I; 74% vs 43% in prospective II; $P = .005$). In the cases in which the tumor did not extend to the carotid nodes (N = 44), the specificities of both methods were similar (95% for both). In the current trials, carotid US had a positive predictive value of 37% in prospective I and 77% in prospective II, and a negative predictive value of 91% in prospective I and 93% in prospective II. Compared with CT, carotid US is superior in local staging of NSCLC, particularly in the identification of less invasive cancer stages and in excluding the presence of carotid metastasis. Whether this translates into an impact on survival or morbidity remains to be shown.

Q: Generate black and white image from webcam I would like to create a simple program using C# that will take a webcam image, convert it to black and white (yes, using a black and white tone-mapped image) and save it to an image file. I have researched this question quite a bit and can find any solutions to this problem. I'm not looking for a solution that will automatically generate the black and white image, but instead simply want to convert the captured webcam image to black and white using a programmed series of steps. I am new to C# and I'm not sure if there is a way to generate a Black and White Tone-Mapped (B/W

Rome: In a major leak of internal documents, WikiLeaks revealed on Sunday that the Italian Defence Ministry is considering buying the F-35 fighter aircraft from the US and possibly even renaming it, in apparent anticipation of a huge backlash by Italian rightwing parties. "After two years of diplomatic discussions and lobbying by the Pentagon, the Italian government is considering buying the Joint Strike Fighter - which costs over €80 billion," WikiLeaks said in its latest dump of documents from the Defence Ministry. The document published by the website said the L-35, as the plane is called in Italian, should be "renamed and adapted to carry out mission specific to the Italian Air Force". Italian sources told AFP this weekend that the Italian government has already decided to buy the F-35 -- which was unable to gather enough votes at a cabinet meeting last week to get its operating licence. In an interview with the ANSA news agency published Saturday, defence minister Roberta Pinotti said: "We are not discussing the name of the plane". But on Sunday the Defence Ministry rejected the claims. "The idea that there is any plan to change the name of the JSF and to modify and adapt the aircraft to its use is false," the ministry said in a statement. The JSF is the most expensive fighter plane in the world at about €80 billion. With a top speed of about 1,430 kilometres an hour, the F-35 is five times faster than its Cold War-era predecessors and can deliver air-to-ground, air-to-air and air-to-air-to-ground weapons. The aircraft is largely manufactured in the US, which has a keen interest in the sale as it is scrambling to hold on to its edge in the aerial arms race. The JSF is an interim model and US defence chief Chuck Hagel has recently been saying that it will be replaced by a whole new version that is "critical to our national security", although he added that "this is years away". The new plane is due to be in service by 2023 and would cost about US $113 billion, a sum critics claim is too high. It has come under particular fire from the ruling centre-right PD party, which has cited a cost of €14 billion -- double the €7.6 billion target set by former premier Silvio Berlusconi. The centre-left Democratic Party has called on the
