Romney's tax plan would cut taxes by $4 trillion

By Jane Slaughter

The fact checkers were on a roll. Bill Maher gave Mitt Romney some love after his recent tax proposals were passed by the Senate. But he had to take one for the team when a Washington Post fact checker checked out the Romney plan and found it based on a faulty premise. Maher said, "Here's the funny thing. Mitt Romney says he's for everyone. Does that include the 47 percent who Romney is going to cut off because they don't pay taxes? And also the people out there whose plans he passed saying, 'Not that there's a lot of you people out there, but can I have my own loaf?' 'Romney is not for that.' Does Mitt Romney not know how to say no?" Guilty as charged. The problem with the analysis, which ran in the Washington Post, is the numbers. "It's a claim that's based on faulty assumptions," the Post fact checker says. "The tax plan that Romney released on Wednesday would reduce taxes for all taxpayers by $4.2 trillion — with $2.6 trillion of that coming from Americans earning less than $50,000 a year, and $1.4 trillion from taxpayers earning more than $100,000." The Post then goes on to note that 09e8f5149f

Time for the gift edition of this week's Software Friday, for you! As any reader of this blog knows, the "The Most Frequently" series continues to include both the best and the worst software to use in the daily routine of how I and many of you work and play. There are no surprises here, except for the fact that I've probably signed up for enough new programs to write a shopping list for the holidays. In the worst category is a new email client for macOS, Mint, iOS, and Android. Called "diaspora," this secure new messaging application is supposed to replace both Twitter and Facebook for those that have left behind the Facebook information industry--a marketing-based extortion and terrorism scheme that has nothing whatsoever to do with open...
