My RV charges the power by a 120V, 240V RV towing a RV power adapter. The power adapter is also connected to the receiver (or converter) and the breakers. I have a trip that will last a week and I'd like to plug in and charge the few things that I don't want to bring. I have three RV plug outlets that are connected to the breaker panel on the bottom of the house - one 120V, one 110V and one 20V. If I use the 240V connector, will the 120V outlet count as 120V or will I have to go through the 110V? A: First, a couple of definitions. If your RV has a 20 V and 120 V receptacles that may be a "110V outlet", you should probably check your owner's manual to see if it was common to be 110 V or if it is different to what you are used to. If it does say "110V
