Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a control apparatus and method of an internal combustion engine and more particularly to a control apparatus and method of an internal combustion engine for controlling the engine to be operating in a knock control mode. 2. Description of the Prior Art Knock in engines refers to a detonation which occurs in the air fuel mixture at the time of compression stroke in the engine. Knock has been one of the serious problems in gasoline engines. In order to eliminate the occurrence of knock, a number of systems have been developed. In the first and second systems, the ignition timing is retarded from the conventional timing or the cylinder compression ratio is increased in order to achieve the knock prevention. These knock prevention methods often require a larger amount of mixture or fuel or a higher temperature in the engine. In order to eliminate the occurrence of knock, three or more ignition plugs are provided. In this case, since the number of fuel injections is increased, the amount of nitrogen oxide (NO.sub.x) formed also increases. In the third system, the scavenging timing is retarded.
