I have no idea where it stores the plugin data, but the problem here is that you can't really delete it because that would also destroy the native CSS class name for the icon which means you could not give it an icon itself. Instead, you can just use a tag which doesn't affect the presentation, but instead may give you a more direct control of the media query. So instead of using this: `@media screen and (min-width: 320px) { .icon-search:before { content: '\E856'; font-family: 'FontAwesome'; padding-right: 5px; } }` use this: `@media screen and (min-width: 320px) { .icon-search { content: '\E856'; font-family: 'FontAwesome';`
