The Spanish Civil Protection Agency (ACPR) said the flight from Spain was the country's first confirmed COVID-19 case. Several airports in Spain and other European countries have been closed down for weeks due to the pandemic. (Jose Manuel Mendez/Pool via AP) The government of Spain has sent a second emergency care team to Puerto Rico after a medical team contracted the new coronavirus while treating the man who died on Sunday. The care team arrived in the U.S. territory on Tuesday and will arrive on Wednesday at a hospital in the San Juan suburb of Isla Verde, the Health Department said in a statement. They will be joined by the care team from Puerto Rico that was sent last week, the statement said. The U.S. territory has 16 confirmed deaths from the new virus so far. ADVERTISEMENT The Spanish government declared a national state of emergency last week and lifted some travel restrictions. Spain has had more than 44,000 confirmed cases of the virus, with the bulk of those in the capital, Madrid. The country has confirmed 2,963 deaths from the virus. In Puerto Rico, a U.S. territory with 3.4 million residents, a nurse at a hospital in San Juan has been diagnosed with the new coronavirus after treating a patient who died Sunday. The patient, a 64-year-old with diabetes, was waiting to be transferred to a different hospital, the Health Department said. He died after suffering a "cardiac event
