Capillary electrophoresis of small molecules: using stable protein-functionalized carbon nanotubes as a universal detector. This work presents a simple method for the determination of several drugs such as morphine, diazepam, and salicylic acid using a novel protein functionalized carbon nanotube (p-CNT) as the universal detector in capillary electrophoresis (CE). When the negative charge of protein functionalized carbon nanotube (p-CNT) is increased by changing its pH value, the surface negatively charged protein will interact with the positively charged analyte to form an adsorbed complex due to the increased electrostatic force. Under alkaline conditions, the analyte migrates toward the p-CNT electrode, which is more negatively charged than the analyte itself, due to the applied voltage, and the analyte-protein adsorbed p-CNT can be charged by coupling with a conductive quartz capillary. The protein functionalized carbon nanotubes are long stable under alkaline conditions and can be used as a universal detector in CE for the analysis of small molecules. Calibration curves for morphine, diazepam, and salicylic acid are linear from 0.2 to 25 μg/mL, and the detection limit is 1.0 μg/mL. Good repeatability was obtained for the determination of these analytes in their injections ranging from 5 to 30 min. This method was successfully applied to the determination of these drugs in spiked human serum samples.FAMILY LEADERS CHRISTINE RUTHERFORD Owner Christine is married to the love of her life, John Rutherford.
