Shoot and Crop The first thing that a new user to Photoshop will usually do is to start off by taking a picture. Before starting work on the image, however, it's important to set the camera or scanner settings so that it will scan properly. Before starting, set the color mode and exposure settings. Use the auto white balance tool (yellow icon) to set white balance and lens white balance at the same time. Next, set the shutter speed at the lowest speed possible to ensure that there will be no blurring. Use the dial to select the lowest speed available. If you're using a digital camera, you can increase the ISO to get a better depth of field. You can increase the ISO to get a better depth of field. With a scanner, you want to have a low resolution to ensure that you have enough light in the room to expose properly. If your scanner settings are set to a lower resolution, you can increase the size of the scan area to get better results. The scan area has a default setting of 60% × 60%. You can increase the size of the scanner area to get a better scan. Finally, set the quality of the scan. If you have a faster scanner, it won't matter if the scans are low resolution. It's a good idea to check the focus of a picture first before scanning. Make sure that you're in focus and that there are no crooked lines. If you don't want the focus to be out of focus, you can modify the auto focus function in the camera's on-screen settings. You can also check focus before scanning. It is common for pictures to have crooked lines because the person taking the picture is not holding the camera steady. If you have crooked lines in the picture and you don't want them in the scan, you can manually focus the scanner. Common problems that beginners have with scanner photos include curved lines, crooked lines, blurry areas, and even a person in the background. When you scan a photo, you need to make sure that it is in focus. You can find Auto Fix in the Preferences menu under the "Batch Processing" tab. Q: Regex check if the string contains only numbers I'm looking for a regular expression that will check if a string only contains numbers. My current regex is (\d+|\d{1,9}|\d*[,.]\d+)|(^$|,$|(,)|$|(,),) A: It is simple. \d+ If you wish to check that there is only one number, use +. To check that there are 1 to 9 numbers, use * (which also matches a number that comes at the end of the string, which is a bad thing). if (preg_match('/\d+/', $s)) { // There are only numbers. } For the theoretical, if you wish to be perfectly correct, you might want: if (preg_match('/^(?=.\d)(?=\d*[.,]\d+)$/', $s)) { // All digits match. } If you can put a space anywhere in the string (including the start or end), you can just use \d. And if you want to make sure there are no more than two numbers after the decimal, you might want something like: if (preg_match('/^(?=.\d)\d*[.,]\d*$/', $s)) { // All digits match and there is no more than 2 numbers. } The present invention relates to a sprocket wheel of the type comprising a hub having a pair of shaft-engaging portions and a plurality of teeth on the periphery thereof, and more particularly to a sprocket wheel of this type which is free of the problems that it is liable to be twisted. A conventional sprocket wheel of this type is described, for example, in Japanese Patent Publication No. SHO 52(1977)-14300. Such a sprocket wheel comprises a hub having a pair of hollowed shaft-engaging portions and a plurality of teeth on the periphery thereof. The teeth are arranged at a given angle to one another in the axial direction thereof and are not always uniform in thickness in the circumferential direction. On the other hand, the outer peripheries of the shaft-engaging portions are each of a two-layer

Tuesday, August 26, 2010 California could pass a law that would ban texting while driving, in an effort to prevent accidents and save lives. "I think it will have a big impact on the usage of cellphones," said David Golder, who makes the "SpeedyText" device that allows cellphones to send texts wirelessly. Last year, California became the first state to ban handheld cell phone use while driving. "The traffic departments all over the state are adopting that policy and if they all adopt that policy, I think that would be a very big trend," Golder said. The company that makes the "SpeedyText" device said that the potential for a texting ban in other states will have a big impact on how people use the $8.95 device. "So far, you can only use this app on your own phone, but we're working on that as well," said Golder. He says "SpeedyText" will be released for Blackberry phones at some point. If you'd like to learn more about the "SpeedyText" wireless texting device, watch the video: The best way to learn how to use the PowerPoint is to practice on a model.
