For more information, see the user guide on the website for Photoshop, available from the Help menu. Managing Layers Photoshop layers can add great depth to an image. In fact, the sheer number of layers that you can add to an image is what enables many Photoshop users to do things that would be impossible in other image editing software. You can add color to an image or make adjustments to the image on a layer, and then apply those changes to the entire image. The undo function enables you to reverse any changes that you make, if necessary. Because you can move and edit layers in your document, you can reuse layers. You may have saved a photo with many layers of adjustments to it, then with a little effort, you can reuse just the parts of that photo that you want. Here are some of the ways that you can use Photoshop's layers: Set up your background: You can save time by using a layer as your background. Just click the Create a New Fill or Adjustment Layer button and select a new background from the drop-down menu that appears. On the layers palette, simply click the top layer and a new background layer appears. Or you can make a new layer on which to work by clicking the New Layer icon in the Layers palette. After you make a new layer, use the Brush to select the color you want to use on that layer. (Chapter 5 explains all about the tools in this palette.) Build your image: After you organize your layers into a document, you can work on each layer as though it were a separate file that you could move to another document. Combine layers: If you want to add just part of the photo to a different document or have an image with portions of one photo that are offset from the original, you can take advantage of the layer system. When you use layers, the image appears as one piece rather than as individual pieces. Control image quality: You can use a layer to create and define a set of standards for an image. Say that you are creating a photo of a medieval castle and that the walls of the castle have eroded over time. You may want to create a layer that defines a standard look for the castle — for example, a blue sky with clouds. After you create this layer, you can apply the standard as a filter to the entire image, affecting all future layers that you add to the image. Setting a default layer visibility state

Comparison of the Validity of the Draw-A-Person Test with an Eye-Gaze Test and the Measure of Personality. Eye-gaze testing and drawings are widely used in psychological research. Draw-a-Person (DAP) is a drawing test proposed for the evaluation of gender-role attitudes. This study compared the validity of the Draw-A-Person test with the Eysenck Personality Inventory (E-PI) and the Rosenberg Self-Esteem Scale (R-SES). The focus was on three consecutive components of validity: internal consistency, criterion-related validity, and factorial validity. The validity of the DAP was generally moderate to good. On two different levels (the subscales "Religious Beliefs and Attitudes" and "Religiosity" and the full scale), the DAP showed good internal consistency and criterion-related validity; however, the DAP could not be reduced to any one of the three personality dimensions used in the E-PI. Also, the DAP did not replicate the six-factor structure of the E-PI. Finally, the DAP was unable to predict self-esteem. On a content level, the DAP seemed to show congruence with the R-SES, in that the subscale "Physical Appearance" showed good congruence with "Physical Appearance." Experimental model of hepatic damage in cattle induced by infectious bovine rhinotracheitis. Infectious bovine rhinotracheitis (IBR) is a viral disease of the upper respiratory tract of cattle. Clinically, affected animals have discharging sinuses in the muzzle and at the ventral margin of the eyes and nose, exudative pleuritis, edema in the ocular orbita and frequent coughing. During viral replication, lymphoid cells are the principal targets. However, the pathogenesis of the lung lesions is not completely defined and the influence of factors such as viruses, treatments, diet, is poorly understood. The objective of this study was to develop a model that reproduces similar lesions to those found in the lungs of animals with IBR. Twelve Holstein male calves, aged between 11 and 20 days, were used for the experiment. Five animals were intranasally inoculated with IBR virus (IBRv) and another five animals served as controls and received only buffered physiological serum. All animals received a standard diet. Twenty-four hours after the inoculation,
