In pregnant women, a careful search should be made for evidence of abdominal or pelvic hernia, especially in patients with suspected appendicitis. A wide variety of hernias have been described during pregnancy. Diagnosis is made by physical examination and the use of diagnostic tests; US and CT are currently the best methods of investigation. Surgery should be postponed until labour in order to prevent risk to the foetus. Surgical repair is indicated for symptomatic hernias, giant hernias, recurrent hernias, for which there is no postpartum repair and for large sacral hernias with a cyst. In rare cases, a simultaneous cholecystectomy may be required.
