You can use the link above to download the complete collection from Fecal extracellular vesicles serve as a non-invasive alternative to whole cells in the metabolic quantification of microbial communities. Microbial extracellular vesicles (EVs) have shown potential as diagnostic and therapeutic agents in the control of microbial infections. However, their development for use in microbiota monitoring has been hampered by the very limited knowledge available on how the EVs from different microbial species and strains interact with the host. The main objective of this study was to determine the potential of EVs as a non-invasive alternative to viable microbial cells for monitoring the metabolism of different microbial communities in the gastrointestinal tract. EVs were isolated by differential ultracentrifugation from the feces of conventionally raised healthy adult pigs. Feces from animals fed a standard pig diet were enriched for intestinal EVs, and feces from pigs fed a diet supplemented with tannic acid were enriched for microbial EVs. Fluorescently labelled EVs and intact microbial cells (1×10^7 bacteria / mL) were co-inoculated to pigs fed standard or tannic acid supplemented diets. Pigs inoculated with bacteria and labelled EVs were monitored by fecal sampling on days 0-8 after inoculation. Animals fed a standard diet showed stable and sustained levels of fluorescent signal in the feces with relatively little variation over time, while pigs fed the tannic acid supplemented diet demonstrated higher levels of variation and a significant reduction in levels of labelled EVs in feces (p

May 19, 2011 2:03 pm Randy Clemens' time in the NFL is coming to an end. The Seattle Seahawks and 49ers have reached agreement on a trade that will send the former Raiders, current Seahawks quarterback back to his home state, now that Jim Harbaugh's quarterback situation is secure in San Francisco.
