Last year, FIFA 21 introduced new animation technology called “Regenerate,” where on-screen players' animations were redrawn after a small amount of time had passed. For our 15th iteration of the game, we have introduced a new animation feature that enables real-time on-screen animations to change without requiring players or coaches to restart a match. Using the data from a real-life match, we create player animations that closely mirror the movement of players in-game. Previously, this was only possible for key on-screen players like goalkeepers and attacking mids. Now, with HyperMotion technology, you can use all 25 players in a match to create a genuine, authentic feeling of play. This impacts how you will play the game on the pitch. We have also made some subtle changes to the way players interact with the ball on the pitch, allowing players to step into tackles with greater control. The new range of movements means that players are more controllable and can give and receive the ball with greater accuracy. This means every touch with the ball is critical. While we have been able to harness the power of new animation technology to give all players the opportunity to show their individual skills and abilities in more intricate ways, our goal has always been to ensure our teams play matches with balanced, controlled movement on the pitch. For this reason, we have also introduced new controls to combat the risk of erratic movement. Players can tackle, for example, by pressing A and pressing the corresponding direction key on the keyboard. Last, but not least, we have made the controls more responsive. This means that in matches, the player movements feel more natural, and this is something that reflects the real-life atmosphere of a match. Finally, we have introduced new animations for the appearance of players who switch positions on the field. These animations offer new versions for players who play on the wing and in midfield, and can also give an insight into how some positions change when players switch positions. Here’s a look at a few gameplay changes that will make a difference in the way you move on the pitch: 1. High-intensity Play To start with, we have improved the high-intensity animation of all players. Your teammates will leave behind a trail of foot splashes, and a handful of players will sprint forward or backward to keep the ball in motion. We have taken advantage of our new animation technology
