More about business accounting, data management, software, financials, banking, free, businessThirty-four of the world's largest countries have signed a "law" which outlaws the export of minerals, hydrocarbons, including oil, and rare earths, essential to the manufacture of electric vehicles. The anti-competitive law, published this morning by the European Commission's competition watchdog, is sure to be a thorn in the side of the Trump administration's "America First" ambitions, but while it might play nicely in Europe, the US government is reported as being decidedly lukewarm on it. The law, which bans "discriminatory trade practices and anti-dumping policies", was drawn up after the EU-wide agreement on trade and investment last summer and countries on Tuesday signed it at the Paris Motor Show, in the run-up to their 22nd ministerial meeting on motor vehicles. "Stronger and more transparent rules of origin, such as the Revised Rules of Origin (RoOs), are vital in order to facilitate and indeed accelerate sustainable mobility," wrote Pete Ashbourne, the chief executive of the European Automobile Manufacturers' Association (ACEA). The RoOs will protect against the creation of allegedly unfair trade barriers, while the law will put the onus on European importers to prove that a vehicle is "primarily" or "essentially" made in the bloc, rather than in another country. The RoOs, which have been under discussion since late 2016, aim to harmonise and simplify rules on how vehicle components are allocated between different areas of manufacturing to ensure "efficient production of cars", as well as ensuring that the EU "is a clear and strong competitor for emerging automotive
