Explore old fashioned cordless, or corded handsaws. Explore the g-code, second off I don't see why you are all ranting about a CNC program, a keygen, a save game or a hack when some of us have already played the cutviewer mill game and didn't get to the ending. I expected a mission where you can walk the path and use the tools, or be forced to use the base models and methods already programmed in. So for me it just comes down to this; A hack is acceptable because we are playing a game. But jeez you wasted my 30 minutes of my life, and the ability to log in and on Windows 10 an easy 10 minutes. Still waiting for the key. Also I have the 360 version. So please don't discount any game based on no XP on my machine. The game may be completely different and I expect you to put up all the Zs. We're not ranting about any of that, because none of that is the issue we're talking about. We have a problem with the removal of the starting logo and how it's done. And it's because that was the last bit of free memory left on the PC. When we make a game, our job is to make it as compatible as possible with the games from before. We don't have a problem with you playing the game. We're not willing to do the same for Cutviewer Mill 3 and we don't see why you're being unreasonable in expecting us to. Long story short, it's a hack and we're not willing to do it as a matter of principle. And you can play the game without any XP problems. We don't have access to Windows 10 anymore because my wife uses it so much, and games have been incompatible from time to time.
